still maintain correspondence with the descendants of those relatives, whom their ascesso s left at home in Scotland when they migrated letter of this sort has fallen into our hands, which notes the flying of a bonnie young Sents woman through the continent, and we give it almost entire. The letter is dated near Laurels Uragmore, Scotland, Christmas, 1879. After but did not get as far Bellagio, the most beausome family matters the letter proceeds, "We had recently as our guest a most pleasant French lidy, the wife of the captain of a French man of war. We spent a pleasant day on board his vessel before they left the Frith of Forth.

"On leaving New Mains I spent a few days with my aunts in Edinburgh before joining pa; a, mamma and Nellie at Harrogate. It is a very gay pize; so we had a lively time for about three weeks. We met a good many acquaintaress there, which added emsiderably to our enjoyment, "Papa and I spent last June on the Continent, We went first to Paris, where we were inclined to linger; there is s) much to see, especially as it was my first visit to that delightful city. We spent one moot light night driving in the Bois de Boulogne, where we found many others, who, like ourselves, had been tempted cut by the beauty of the night. We devoted an entire the beauty of the night. We devoted an entire the beauty of the night. tire day to Versailles and the Trianons. 1 cin well understand Mario Antoinette's love for the latter, which is a most charming retreat. It must have been such a relief to leave the pomp and ctiquette of Court If's behind her for a while. Going through the Louvre we were charmed with the calebrated Venus do Ml'. It is gree personified. I could not help wishing that you, who so thoroughly appreciate coulpture, had been with us. Do you remember admiring a group in the hotel parlor? You thought the expression of the girl's

"The country we passed through between Munich, Salzburg and Litz is exceedingly pioturesque; indeed, our route was chosen for the beauty of the scenery. From Linz we sailed down the Danube to Vienna. The points which interested me most were Pocklaim, where according to the legend, Rudiger, one of the heroes of Ribelungen-Lied, entertained Chriemhild on her journey to the land of the Heuns; and Nolk, a Benedictine abbey, which is much more like a large palace than a monastery, oc cupies a commanding position, and has with stood several seiges. "The Viennese are exceedingly well off in having many pleasant exercisions in the neighborhood of their city. Papa has business friends at Hierzing, a chaming little village and faverite place for summer residences. During a visit we paid them I saw fire flies for the first time. We did a great deal of sight steing. The royal jewels, many of which belonged to The royal jewels, many of which belonged to Maria Theresa, are splendid. They are kept in the Treasury. We noticed the horose po of fall into a pleasant sleep and wake up in the Waltenstein, Charlemagne's crown, &c., and a salt cellar by Benvenut, Cellini

"The Prater is a favorite resert in May, but was rather empty at the time of our visit, There is a quadruple row of fine old chustous trees in the Haupt Allee. The festivities for the silver weeding of the Emperor were ever before our arrival, but we saw the pres mes, | nees. which were numerous; among them were a perifolio, made up by the leading Austrian and Hungarian er tats; an immense sliver wed ding cake, and a great many addresses, some of which were very hands moly cotten up.

I believe it only graws on the highest per s of the Alps. We only spent one night at Graz continuing our jurney next day. Although the capital of Styris, it seems rather a sleepy sort of plac ; he hotels are all very old fashioued. The first part of the day we again had fine seenery but before reaching friesce we had to cross the dreary plain of the Karst, where vegetation is scant indeed. It is strewn with great blocks of lime stone which absorb the heat to such an extent during the day, that even at night, we suffered from it. Near Tricate, is the beautiful Miramara which belonged to the iil fated Emperor Max. I have heard it compared to Fairylands. It is built on a promontary and washed by the waves of the Adriatic, yet the gardens are simply exquisite. We spent nearly a whole day there and only saw a small portion of them. Oa account of the sharks it s not sale to bathe in the open sea, so they have floating baths, where the inhabitants appear to spend the greater portion of their time. I only patronized them once and felt no desire to repeat the experiment, the water was so warm, and the noise was so great. The streets of Trieste are all paved and it was so hot that we had to keep the windows closed during the day. We went by sea to Venice, starting after dark when the lights of Trieste had a very pleasing effect, and arriving soon after sunrise. The first thing that strikes one on landing is the great stillness, perhaps it would be more correct to say silence, for there is plenty of movement. It

An interesting scene takes place every afternoon; puro nally at two o'clock the great bell rings (not the cathedral) and thousands of pigeons come flooking to be fed. We also visited the Lide Island; is very small but there are corriages on it.

We everywhere re marked the Venician's love of color, which is almost eriental in its gorgeousoess. Venice undoubtedly looks best at moodlight. We passed one delightful evening on the grand

During a prac-tice of twenty years I have never known a medicine to act as promptly and with such happy effects.
